327 TO COME

cially in some cases of infantile anemia, proves to me in a clear and conclusive manner, from the satisfactory results obtained, that it is destined to occupy a place of preference among the ferruginous compounds. While it is true that modern therapeutics counts upon an immense number of remedies for the treatment of anemia in its different forms, it is no less a fact that the number of preparations are very limited which so completely fill all requirements as does this one.
