

Friday March 9th

Dad's tooth ached badly last night so after we got the chaise home this morning he went down to have it out, so I went down with him in the cutter and took Mr. Holkes his three old hens. I went down to Aunt Alice; and waited there for Dad. He didn't come for about two hours and I had my dinner down there, he had to wait but got his tooth pulled. It is sore to night more from the stuff Bill injected than anything. Lila come over with us as there is no high school this afternoon Mr. Barron having gone away. This afternoon Frank and I went down to the mill and as they had come down we got four bags of it. To night Frank has gone down to Club. Enoch and Aunt Annie went over to Mrs. Patterson this afternoon. Ada told Dad this morning that Alan tells in his last letter home that he saw fifteen dead children, killed from eating poisoned candies which were dropped from a German zeppelin flying over one of the small French towns behind the trenches. I don't know whether that convinced Dad that the Germans are any thing of savages compared with the Allies in their tactics or not, as he always refuses to believe any such stories we hear of them through other sources. It has been fairly sunny to day but a cold raw wind all day.
