Surgical Suggestions.

Don't think every case of summer colic is gall-stone disease. The principal points in the diagnosis of the latter affection are nausea and vomiting, pain with colic, fever, jaundice and tumor. We had all of these in a case lately, but the patient had a tapeworm. Jaundice may be absent in some cases; in fact, in many cases of gall-stone disease the diagnosis is overlooked because there is no jaundice.—Amer. Journ. of Surg.
