The Care of Surgical Patients—No. 5.

Active infections in the pelvis, cholangitis and certain stages of peritonitis are oftentimes better left undisturbed than interfered with when the patient's illness is due to a general toxemia and not to some focus of disease. These patients are still a subject of considerable controversy but I believe the opinion is gaining ground that if they are definitely getting over the infection it is worth while to wait for a time until some immunity is established.—Balfour; Mayo Clinic. Med. Record.
