Conclusions Concerning Anesthetics.

Local anesthesia with cocaine and similar agents has a limited field of usefulness. The amount of cocaine employed by infiltration should always be short of a toxic dose, 1-10 to $\frac{1}{4}$ of a grain. It should be employed in normal salt solution with small amounts of adrenalin. Where the amount does not exceed 1-19 of a grain it may safely be preceded by a small dose of morphine and scopolamin.

Spinal cord anesthesia has to-day no place in surgery.—
