Cancer of the Stomach

should be as curable as cancer of the breast, but unfortunately it is usually neglected until a period when cure is out of the question. It has been our habit in the past to wait too long for a diagnosis. It is conceded that when cancer of the stomach can be positively diagnosticated, it is too late to expect a cure by operation; therefore we are brought to the position that cancer of the stomach should be prevented—in other words, we should operate in the pre-cancerous stage, namely during the period of precancerous ulcer.—Dr. Parker Syms; New York Med. Journ.
