Diagnosis of Fracture.

In very many cases it is not necessary to the diagnosis of fracture to elicit crepitus and abnormal mobility—often painful manipulations. In several forms of fracture there are other positive diagnostic evidences. Thus, with Colles' fracture the level of the styloid of the radius will almost always be found to have receded from beyond that of the styloid of the ulna. Moreover, X-ray examinations save much painful manipulation.—Amer. Journ. of Surg.
