They are complaining that there are no songs being published nowadays for bass voices. Come to think of it, bass songs are pretty scarce. Some time was in the days of the great Ignor Foli (who was really Foley, and as Irish as Irish could be, but he lived in an era when it was useless to expect the public to think you could sing unless you bore a foreign name), when composers wrote bass parts aplenty, because the path to commercial success was to get Foli to sing them. An examination of the best known bass songs will show that they nearly all date fifty years back or more. Writers of ballads and composers of operas think in terms of the tenor, and certainly in the great operas it is always the tenor who has the "fat" parts. In only two operas do the tenors play second fiddle. These are Massenet's "Thais," and Rossini's "Barber of Seville."

AMROSCH LIKES BAGPIPES

Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, which can be heard over the air every Saturday night) has a cosmopolitan taste in music. "I even adore the Scottish bagpipes," he says in his entertaining memoirs, "and I am almost in sympathy with the catchman who says his idea of heaven is 'twenty bagpipes a' playin' thigither in a sma' room and each one playing a different tune.'"

toes Go Up; Market

Those who went to the Saturday morning had even to believe that spring is a step away. The first maple was available at $3 per gallon, 80 cents per quart. It is not that there will be more next day. The markets are getting tighter every week, which is another sure sign of approaching spring. All stands quoted 35 cents Saturday and but 30 cents. Both commodities plentiful.

Potatoes seem to be going for anything. Some were quoted at 35 cents per peck and others at 40 cents. Onions were 50 cents per quart basket. The market for carrots were about the same. Potatoes were 22 cents and loins 20 cents. Beef ranged from 15 to 25 cents.
