Control of Post-Anesthetic Nausea.

Believing that nausea following anesthesia is due to the smell of the anesthetic, Lumbard has devised a simple method whereby a piece of gauze impregnated with perfume is attached to the patient's nose after the anesthetic has been administered. Lumbard claims that the method is highly efficient in preventing nausea. The selection of the perfume depends upon the likings of the patient. In the author's practice, he prefers the oil of bitter orange peel.—Lumbard; Med. Record.

Weather

Temp.

Rained all night - all day, has been a terrible day. Mother has suffered something fierce. We have kept hot brandy sippers on her all the afternoon. Melba took Grace & went for her. The Dr was here about twelve to night.
