Ether—Practical Administration. No. 14.

After the operation is over and the ether withdrawn, the management of the case continues to be of vital importance. Some one should remain with the patient until he is rational. The room should be darkened and quiet. A dry gown and warm bedding should be provided. Liquids may be allowed early. Should there be great thirst, the result of excessive vomiting, salt solution by rectum will relieve. The subsequent diet should be governed by the nature of the operation, permitting a full diet as soon as the best interests of the patient allow.—Dr. J. B. Bogan; N. Y. Med. Journ.
