

of it. This after noon Frank took the team back and worked all the after noon but says it isn't any to dry yet. John Weiss made a start to day too, Art Decumber came over the after noon and he and Dad put the picture snowing up in the dining room I helped them for a little while but I measured one piece 23 inches instead of 32 (the yard stick was upside down) and then went to sleep so I went out and continued the work I was at this morning viz: grabbing out the cherry tree roots and digging the strips for my hedge. I got it all dug down to the ditch by to night. Very hot to day

Saturday May 27th

It rained first thing this morning so nothing more could be done on the land I don't remember what we did this morning but I don't reckon it was anything very exciting. Come to think, I believe I read and cleaned off Queen and Joe, and Dad did chores and cleaned out the cellar. Frank went back to the gully and fastened his bee hive up in a tree. This after noon I had quite a snowge out in the hay and about four o'clock Dad & Frank went down town in the wagon to look at the refrigerator Emery is making and I went down to the corner with them to get some of the little spruce trees that are thick down on the side hill in Dickey Steven's orchard. I was about an hour hunting for Frank as Dad said I had better get his permission to take them and at last found him over at Jack Martin's, he told me to take all I wanted as they were a nuisance, so I went back and got quite an arm full pulled before Dad & Frank got back with the wagon and they with them home for me. I got a few of them set out to night before dark and heeled the rest of them in. I got them planted down to about the brow of the hill and from there down to the ditch it is heavy clay and I will have to get some other earth to put in. Aunty set me over a root of the blue lilly but I didn't get it set out to night. It got very black this after noon and looked like a proper cause of a thunder storm but it didn't amount to much sort of a drizzle all the after noon.

Sunday May 28th

This morning after we did most of the chores and I set out the lilly and before we had breakfast Frank and I went for a swim down below Dixonsburg's. The water was pretty
