Ether—Practical Administration. No. II.

Within a reasonable limit, quality, not rate, is the pulse consideration; and depth, not rate, of the respiration. As to the pupil, use it more as an arbiter when necessary to decide two seemingly opposed factors, or to decide the importance, when otherwise all seems well, of the presence of certain conditions, as cyanosis, stertor, continued rigidity, or an increasing rapidity of pulse, or shallowness of respiration.—
