

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 9, 1870.

Charley has been splitting wood & c.
So day I took me out to Dover on a visiting expedition.
We took dinner with Mrs. Coppway and afterwards I visited to rather called at a number of places. Amongst them at Mrs. Sovereigns where I had a great time with Mrs. H. Sovereign and Annie Douglas, who was there helping make a quilt.
We took tea and spent the evening at Walter Oels.
The past day has not been one of my brightest but yet my brightest is all in mine!

THURSDAY, MARCH 10, 1870.

My man has, as usual been splitting wood at the house.

I went up to the blacksmiths this forenoon to get a tire set on the new wheel which I have been making. Got it done all right.

It is needful that the moral structure of our life ~~be~~ not neglected even for one moment. It is said that every action or thought of a man is marked how small is followed by its influence, either for good or for evil. And that influence, or rather the result, may be lasting or temporary.
