Diagnostic Aphorisms in Gynecology—No. 2.

A fixed tumor in a woman at or past the menopause suggests malignancy; in a young woman it suggests an inflammatory mass or an inflamed tumor.

A supposed ovarian cyst can sometimes be removed by passing a catheter, and a supposed solid tumor by giving an enema.

When a woman in her teens or early twenties has an irregular tumor suggesting fibroids, look out for pus tubes. Fibroids are rare before the age of twenty-five.—Giles.
