

the parlor carpet while we were gone. This afternoon Frank and I rode out to Tupper's with Charlie Guambury who was going to help Tupper dip sheep, we loaled around there for awhile and helped him weigh a weak calf and then went over to John Wess' to see if he would make up a cement post mould like his. He was sewing a cedar stick for a brace. We were over there a long time poking around. He said he had more work to do now than he would ever get done but if we couldn't get any one else to make us one he would so we told him we would find out down at the Wido spread and he said he would lead us his for a pattern. We didn't get home till after six. Dad had spent the afternoon putting down the parlor carpet. I learned the last of the second canto of the "Lally of the Lake" to day. I started it on the 25th of April so didn't take so long as I did learning the first canto two years ago. I tried a little different scheme of writing it out which works better. It has been fair all day but a big thunder storm went ^{two to night} down.

The actual time I took cutting it wasn't very long but it took along time to rake up the debris on the other side of the ditch left by the hail storm, then I was a long time getting the lawn mower set right. I think Dad ditched around the barnyard most of the day but had to keep his eye on the baby this afternoon after he woke up as Enah went down to Bill's to get her teeth fixed. He intended to go down to night to a meeting of the W. D. Smith reunion committee but about five o'clock Ashlaw the castrator from Caledonia came in and as Dad couldn't go with him to night as he had him to stay here all night and he would go to Mr. Fleming's & Tom Johnson's with him in the evening as they are the only two around here who have entire colts except our Billy, so he agreed to the proposition and accordingly put his horse in, then it started to rain and turned out such a nasty night that Dad stayed home and entertained Mr. Ashlaw by listening to his adventures in his many fields of occupation, which though numerous are all of about the same standard and as one would expect a
