Pleurisy in Children—No. 2.

In acute, non-tuberculous pleurisy the symptoms may be mainly abdominal. Especially in a child may an appendicitis turn out to be a pleurisy; and failure to keep this in mind may cause considerable embarrassment upon the part of the surgeon of "natural ability," but who is not grounded in diagnostic surgical pathology. When operating upon appendicitis in a child do not neglect to first examine the chest.—Williams; Med. World.
