

The buds on the trees are quite visible this morning, May 15th 1892

May 15th 1892.
In the night it rained quite hard, and while it was still raining a man came to the windows of the factory and enquired if he was on the right road to Kingston, I asked which way he was going he replied East. I told him he was wrong he must go over the road he came, for a ways and turn to the left, he had come from Kingston Mills.

Visitors to night were J. Lane and Robert Donaldson, we had a pleasant evening together.

Mon. 16.

fine and warm, but very high winds from the west made fine Cheese to-day

Tue. 17.

fine and warm high west winds learned my first lesson in making milk dividend's with J. Lane

Wed. 18.

Lovely warm day wind east, a very gentle breeze. The leaves are becoming quite conspicuous on the trees now, changed took off my underware to-day, and feel much better of the change.

Thu. 19.

Beautiful morning, a little cool at first, but turning quite warm, wind East, and bringing on the rain at about five P.M. up till nine they were only light dashes. The milk inspector was here to-day (Pollards) he tried my Cheese, and pronounced them first class. The milk stood the best at all right being a medium quality. While writing the above account of the day, a heavy dash of rain is falling with the appearance of continuing
