

NOVEMBER

MONDAY 28

1887

The rain of the last three days culminated in a snow storm last night almost the first in the season here. Some five or six inches fell this time.

Leavis went up to the Deacon neighborhood after potatoes this forenoon, while I worked around at sundry jobs, getting things in readiness for winter ^{when} seems to be upon us now in earnest. Have to spend the evenings at paring apples occasionally, which we did to night. There being quite a few of the dew apples & palling

NOVEMBER

TUESDAY 29

1887

The small quantity of snow that fell on Sunday evening last is chabbling us to draw up some wood out the bob-sleighs.

Went out to blow this afternoon after some winter boots and shoes for myself and Leavis's family. Made a purchase of Caley of more than nine dollars worth. Got a pair of water-proof felt boots for myself at $3.75 per pair.

The weather is quite cold, not far from zero to night.