Diagnostic Pitfalls (Concluded)

"Neurasthenia." The real disease almost always shows itself in youth on the basis of congenital tendencies, though like tuberculosis it may be roused into active progress by any prolonged strain, mental or physical. When it appears after middle age it is almost always a symptom of organic disease such as dementia paralytica, chronic nephritis, arteriosclerosis, myxedema, hyperthyroidism or phthisis.

The incipient stages of the disease mentioned in the last sentence are rarely recognized. The same is true of gastric ulcer, pernicious anemia, leukemia, cirrhosis of the liver, congenital renal cysts, renal tuberculosis and many other diseases.—Cabot; J. A. M. A.
