

1920.

Mrs. Ines and Alice sent me candies - Mrs. Ines's was a chocolate bar and Alice sent a box of conversational lozenges. Snowing quite hard. Started after dinner and when I got home there was a great drift - in the path - especially at the foot of the steps. Jimmy Ryan was here and he shovelled it out before he went to bed. Quite mild, however, and I should not wonder if it changes to rain. Read a chapter of "The Clash."

Finished "The Wild Geese" by Stanley J. Weyman. Practised an hour. Went down for the mail before dinner. Tipped some papers for Alice (a contest - things found on a cent) also tipped Dorothy's story "and in conclusion" to send to Young's Magazine for her. Went down for "The Globe". Telephoned Nell to wish her "Many Happy Returns of the Day". Says the flu is very bad in old Toronto. Perhaps we may have Dorothy come home. After tea went to a party at Alice's (given for Miss Burdette). Had a good time. Charles got home from Walkerton.
