The Urine in Diseases of Infancy.

In an analysis of the urine in 667 children, Morse and Crothers have found that, putting aside diseases of the gastrointestinal tracts, albuminuria and casts are more often found in pneumonia and meningitis than in other acute diseases of infancy. They disagree with other writers on the frequency of nephritis following otitis media and eczema. They also show that in infancy nephritis rarely produces edema, while conversely, edema in infancy is usually due to some cause other than disease of the kidneys.
