54 TO COME

Typhoid-Differential Diagnosis—No. 4.

Chronic ulcerative endocarditis may be very similar to typhoid fever. Its differential symptoms are chills, irregular fever, substernal pain, endocardial murmurs, no rose spots, no abdominal symptoms, a more or less leucocytosis, the absence of the Widal reaction, and positive blood cultures showing other organisms than B. typhosus.

Catarrhal enteritis may be differentiated from typhoid fever through the absence of epistaxis, bronchitis, high fever, enlargement of spleen, and rose spots. Blood cultures and the Widal test will be found to be negative.—Rueck; Med. Record.

A fine day

Temp.

*I took Melba. Maude was home nursing a boil, on her lip Fleet caught a skunk you know the rest. John was ploughing all day. Ely Clarke got his hand
all smashed in the wind mill.*
