Diagnostic Pitfalls in Abdomnal Surgery—No. 3.

Many digestive symptoms come from chronic appendicitis. In every intractable dyspepsia unless we can satisfy ourselves as to its cause we should suspect the appendix even though no marked local symptoms have appeared in that region.

Of floating kidney the author says the majority of women who have movable kidney have no symptoms arising from this condition. If there are paroxysms of pain due to kinking of the ureter or of the pelvis of the kidney, and during these attacks of pain or just afterward marked urinary changes occur, then we are warranted in fastening the kidney.—Hedges.
