Collodion in Boils.

Furuncles are now being treated by painting a ring of collodion around the seat of the lesion. Repeated several times daily, this has been found to exert a gentle and increasing pressure on the boil, which results in its eventually bursting, the core being expressed at the same time. The use of sodium citrate has also been advocated, a 1 per cent. solution in normal saline applied on a gauze dressing having been found to set up a flow of lymph and maintain the fluidity of the serum.—Critic and Guide.
